

Our New Associate

We are pleased and excited to welcome James Ridgway, M.D. as an Associate at the Larrabee Center; he joins us in September. Dr. Ridgway was our University of Washington Fellow in facial plastic surgery for 2009-2010. He did his medical training at the University of Arizona in Tucson and his Otolaryngology-Head and Neck surgery training at the University of California, Irvine. As a post-graduate fellow in 2004 and 2005, he studied and did research at the Beckman Laser Institute.

Dr. Ridgway's academic career is replete with honors and awards that include: Triologic Society Resident Research Award, Seymour R. Cohen Award - American Broncho-Esophagological Association, Shirley Baron Resident Research Award - The Triologic Society, American Society for Laser Medicine & Surgery (ASLMS) Research Award, and UCI Chao Cancer Center Research Award. He is Board Certified by the American Board of Otolaryngology Head and Neck Surgery and this year passed his Fellowship examination given by the American Board of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery.

Superbly qualified academically, Dr. Ridgway also brings unique personal skills to the Larrabee Center. He is a well respected visual artist who also worked in graphic design prior to entering medical school. He has continued to use those skills in medical illustration and is working on a new edition of our Surgical Anatomy of the Face.

Dr. Ridgway is truly committed to the art and craft of facial plastic surgery in its broadest spectrum. In addition to cosmetic procedures, he will continue to perform cancer reconstructions, functional nasal surgery and facial trauma reconstruction for example.

We are pleased and honored to welcome him to the Larrabee Center.
